You have no teeth in the settlement. Go and sin no more won't do it, and that is all you have in this document. The wording is so vague Microsoft can, and will, do whatever they want to do. It will be business as usual at Microsoft. And who can blame them. They got exactly what they wanted from the Government, A vaguely worded unenforceable document with A business as usual Guarantee. You had better listen to some of State lawyers. Microsoft has aptly demonstrated, business as usual, in the recent past, and will do so again in the future, with this document in place.
